

6-27-1997

Trends. Psychotherapy and Foreign Policy

Follow this and additional works at: <http://commons.erau.edu/ibpp>

 Part of the International and Area Studies Commons, International Relations Commons, and the Psychoanalysis and Psychotherapy Commons

---

Recommended Citation

(1997) "Trends. Psychotherapy and Foreign Policy," International Bulletin of Political Psychology: Vol. 2 : Iss. 9 , Article 5.
Available at: <http://commons.erau.edu/ibpp/vol2/iss9/5>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Journals at Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in International Bulletin of Political Psychology by an authorized administrator of Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact commons@erau.edu.

International Bulletin of Political Psychology

Title: Trends. Psychotherapy and Foreign Policy

Author: Editor

Volume: 2

Issue: 9

Date: 1997-06-27

Keywords: Psychotherapy, Russia, Foreign Policy

According to at least one Russian international relations analyst, inviting Russia into the Paris Club, making it a veritable equal at the G-7 (now the Summit of 8), and pressing for its admittance into the World Trade Organization is "part of the West's psychotherapy for Russia." A senior American official implied, "If massaging Russia requires a degree of fakery and disingenuousness, it is a small price to pay." What is being communicated here? That Russia is being lied to and is lying back to enjoy it? That psychotherapy is the art and science of lying on a couch and being lied to? Perhaps a new version of that old Soviet adage--"they pretend to pay us, we pretend to work"? Now it's "they pretend they'll respect us in the morning, we pretend we'll love them tonight, and we'll both mimic erotic bilateral asphyxiation." Now where's that rope Lenin was talking about? (See Erlanger, S. (June 22, 1997.) Russia sits with 'Big 8' party crasher no more. The New York Times, p.6.)