Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Prescott, Arizona, will be hosting Aviation Communication: A Multi-Cultural Forum from April 9-11, 1997. Its purpose is to examine race, gender, culture, political, psychological, and language effects on aviation and aerospace communication. Of special interest to IBPP readers will be topics such as (1) The Politics of Technical Decisions, (2) Political Psychology of Communication, (3) Intercultural Communication, (4) Technology and Culture Studies, (5) Human Factors, and (6) Language, Cognitive, and Communication Models of Terrorism, Intelligence, Organized Crime, Foreign Policy, and Security.

If you wish to present a paper or propose a panel, submit your name, title of paper or panel, your title and organization, address, a brief resume, and a 200-word abstract. The deadline is January 9, 1997. This should be an outstanding opportunity for industry, government, and other funding sources to make direct contact with researchers. And remember it is not required that your research be in aviation --only that your work be transferable to aviation applications.
